

Some Queries, which may deserve Consideration.

IF it be not necessary to enquire on what occasion a Million of Louis d'Or's have come into England, since the death of the King of Spain; that so, according to the Event of that enquiry, some body may be thank'd, or may be hang'd.

2. What was the true Reason which made some Men fall so violently on the Treaty of Partition of Spain, after it was quite out of doors: Whether if it was to excuse the French King's breach of Faith, it was not civilly done; and if it was to cover their own bargain, that he should have the whole, it was not craftily done?

3. Whether Monf. T—d's Dukedom and Blue Ribbond be not a full proof his Master thought his Money was judiciously distributed; and whether there can be a better hint for discovering the Takers, than to call to mind, who were most eager in maintaining it was too soon to enter into a War, till all honest and wise Men saw it was too late?

4. Whether Monf. T—d, when he said of a Noble M—. That he was le dernier des Hommes, meant that he had not done all he could, or that he could not do all he had undertaken?

5. Whether it be a good Proof of the Secresie of our Councils, That the first Notice of our having own'd the Duke of Anjou for King of Spain, should come from the Paris Gazette?

6. Why they who were afraid of giving Offence, by so much as naming the Peace of Europe in February, should talk of reducing the exorbitant Power of France in June? Whether the Change was owing to one Petition that did come, and more that were fear'd? Or, whether a certain Great Prince might not allure Men to speake a big Word, when it could signifie nothing, rather than not secure the meeting again of sure Friends?

7. Whether the Men who oppos'd putting the Crown on K—g Will—'s head, be not the fittest to be trusted to keep it fix'd and easy there?

8. Whether, as the Case stands, the Habeas Corpus Act be a sufficient Security for the Liberty of the Subject? And whether Arbitrary Power be not less terrible in the Hands of One, than of Many; since in the first Case Shame or Pity may sometimes prevail, but never in the other?

9. By what Law the executive Power of the Government has been transferr'd; and how much better Things have been administred, since it has been exercis'd by the H— of C—s?

10. Whether the requiring an account of what Officers have been put into the Army, and how an Address has been executed as to the making Justices and Deputy Lieutenants, be not somewhat New in England?

11. Whether a Vote which can absolve a Sec— of St— from his Oath, may not, when Time shall serve, be made use of to absolve People from other Oaths?

12. Whether Innocence be not like to be safe, where the Accusers pretend to prescribe Rules to the Judges; and where, as soon as they have accus'd, they can give Judgment themselves?

13. Whether more Invention was shewn in contriving Crimes for some late Accusations, or more Skill in contriving Delays to hinder its being judg'd whether they were Crimes or no?

14. Whether the Men employ'd in the high Commission by K—7— would not make the fittest sett of Commissioners for disposing of Ecclesiastical Preferments under K—W—?

15. Whether the Noble E— and the Ber—B—, who contracted close Friendship, while they were serving the Church of England in the High Commission, do not joyn in serving the same Church, after the same manner, now they are instigating the lower H— of Com— against the B—s?

16. Whether it be not obvious that the E—of M—may have a more decent excuse for delivering up his present Master, than the L—Ch—had for betraying his Old Master; and whether it be impossible, that the same Man should take a Fancy to play the same Trick Twice?

17. Whether my Lord Sly has not acted a very open part of late; and whether he would have so far pluck'd off the Mask, if his Expectations were not very near, as well as very sure?

18. What Mr H—, meant, when he stop'd the motion for abjuring the Pr—W—, by saying, It was to do him too much Honour to name that Gentleman? Whether his Prophecy, that before the Session ended, Things should be so order'd that that Gentleman should be never more thought of, be fulfill'd? And whether the way to accomplish it, was to contrive to place Sir J—B—, in the Chair of the C—for the Succession Bill?

19. Whether Mr H—, has not made choice of a very proper Envoy, in sending Toland to notify to the good Old Pr—els, that she owes the Crown to the Sp—r? And whether, hereafter, if she finds her self oblig'd to make the one her Treasurer for his Honesty, she must not make the other Arch-b— for his Religion?

20. Which part J—k H— acts best, railing against K—W— in the H— of C—, or the French King in Gl—Shire?

21. Whether the making a Grant of So H—fields to the E— of Portland, after having refus'd it to J—k H— can ever be forgiven? And whether J—k H— does not avoid the sin of Ingratitude, let him rail ever so much, while he forbears to write Libels; because tho' it be plain, he owes his Hand to the King's Mercy, it is not upon Record, that he owes his Tongue to him.

22. Whether a worthy M—r, of about 6 or 700 l. a Year, who can spend 2000 a Year, and yet make Purchases, and take up Mortgages, all the while, has not found out an Expedient which might reasonably put him above envying, any body for either Grant, Office or Pensions.

23. Whether it be not the worst sort of ill husbandry, to employ Men without Reward, to examine into, and state Accounts? And what Dr. D—, meant, when he offer'd himself to spend Two or Three Years in such a Business? If he was, during that time, to subsist upon Charity or Corruption?

24. Whether it would not make a tolerable good Picture to represent, Four greedy Knaves struggling with one another, who should catch a Golden-Ball, which in the mean time is falling into a quiet honest Man's Lap? And whether at last Mr. C—, will not see that he has no Friends, and Sir T—P— that he deserves none? Whether Sir B—S— will stay, or Mr. H—, can stay till another Vacancy?

25. Whether Sir E—S— did not deserve the Thanks of the H— in March, for detecting Bribery in others; and whether the H— did not deserve the Thanks of Sir E—S— in May, for stifling the Detection of Bribery in himself? And whether mankind will not agree it to be just, to Vote the producing Men's Letters under their own hands to be a malicious endeavour to raise Reflections and Scandalous Reports against them?

26. Whether there ever was a Life more uniform and of a piece, than Sir E—S—'s! Alike ill-manner'd, ill-natur'd and insolent; alike corrupt, whether in or out of the Chair, whether in or out of Favour; the same Enemy to his Countrey, when pretending to the Name of a Patriot, and when ridiculing it. As to private matters, he began with cheating his Father, went on with cheating all who were intrusted to him, or trusted him, and conclude with cheating his own Son. As to the Publick, he has always acted steady, by one Rule, got what he could without Remorse or Shame.
